About this directory

Families at risk of separation associated with parental substance use disorders (SUD) can find healing and evidence-based treatment in comprehensive family treatment programs. These specialized programs provide substance use disorder treatment, therapy, parenting skills training, life skills, and job readiness education with the support of professional staff who ensure the safety of children while their parents and families achieve sobriety and recovery. While programs may vary in their therapeutic approach and specific modality, the goal is consistent: keeping families together so they can recover.

New light has been shone on the importance of these programs through the passage of the federal Family First Prevention Services Act. This law, enacted in 2018, presents an opportunity for child welfare professionals to work together with family-focused residential treatment program staff to keep families together during treatment for substance use disorders BEFORE separation occurs. Under the new law, effective October 1, 2018, states can receive federal Title IV-E foster care maintenance reimbursement for children placed in family-based residential treatment programs with their parent(s) just as they do for placement in traditional foster placement. For more information on the Family First Prevention Services Act, visit the Child Welfare League of America, the Children's Defense Fund, or review the November 2018 briefing from the Administration on Children, Youth, and Families.

To ensure that child welfare agencies and the public at large are aware of the residential family treatment programs that are currently available, Volunteers of America (VOA) commissioned Wilder Research to create a directory of residential substance use disorder treatment programs that have program models for parents and children in the same treatment facility. The goals of compiling the directory were: (1) to provide parents seeking treatment with information on family residential treatment centers; (2) to provide child welfare professionals with information about family treatment centers that may be eligible for Title IV-E reimbursement; and, (3) to provide policy-makers with information on the capacity and need for family-based residential treatment services.

Which programs are included in the directory?

The directory (pages 1-61) includes 363 programs that provide family residential substance use disorder treatment programs. These programs were identified by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) and/or through a subsequent study conducted by Wilder Research and VOA. This represents an estimated 299 organizations across 48 states, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. Please note that some provider organizations manage multiple family treatment program locations; thus the total number of programs is larger than the total number of providers.

Due to limitations of the initial SAMHSA listing and the subsequent research conducted by Wilder Research and VOA, the directory may not include all family residential substance use treatment programs across the United States. For more on the methods used, please see the Methods section at the end of the directory. This inventory can be used to ascertain a more complete listing over time, as the data are critical to ensure access for the population of families in need of these services.

How can I add a program or update information for the Directory?

Adding information to the inventory can be done by sending an email with the subject “Parent-Child Treatment Directory” to DirectoryUpdates@voa.org. For new programs to be added, please provide all of the following: contact information, description of state residential treatment licensing/certification, age range of children that can be accepted, maximum number of children, and maximum number of families that can be accommodated at one time. Also, please note if it is a father and children’s program. You can also send corrections/updates for programs that are already in the directory.

Wilder Research partnered with Volunteers of America (VOA) to create a directory of residential substance use disorder treatment programs that house parents and their children together in the same facility. This directory aims to identify programs that are potentially eligible for Title IV-E funds and to inform about the services they provide. The following provides the methods used to create the directory.

SAMHSA Directory search

In June 2018, Wilder Research worked with the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) to identify eligible family treatment programs from their 2017 National Directory of Drug and Alcohol Abuse Treatment Facilities. This resulted in an initial list of 317 programs that were listed as providing:

- 1) Residential care for substance abuse
- 2) Residential beds for clients' children
- 3) Services to pregnant and postpartum women
- 4) Trauma-related counseling

Using this initial list of programs plus two additional programs identified by VOA, Wilder completed a web scan to identify a main contact and email address for each provider. Through this scan and after a careful review of the SAMHSA list, Wilder compiled an initial survey sample of 271 organizations representing 320 programs. (Note: Because some organizations deliver family residential treatment at multiple sites, the number of programs outnumbers the total number of organizations). This list likely did not include all family treatment programs across the U.S., and contained inconsistencies that made it difficult to identify the exact number of treatment organizations.

Initial email survey of providers

In June 2018, Wilder emailed a web survey to all treatment programs in the sample. The survey asked organizations to confirm that they provide family residential substance use disorder treatment services, verify their program's contact information, and answer some additional questions about capacity and services provided. After the initial email, each program received multiple reminders to complete the roughly 5-minute survey. A total of 90 out of 271 organizations participated in the email survey for an initial response rate of 33 percent.

Phone interviews with providers and final email of non-respondents

In order to boost the response rate, Wilder Research invited organizations that had not responded to the email survey to complete a phone interview. From July – September 2018, Wilder followed up by phone with the providers that had not completed the emailed survey. Interviewers also left voicemails when a respondent could not be reached.

On September 10, 2018, Wilder emailed the survey one final time to those respondents who had not previously participated in the survey online or by phone. When the survey closed on September 17, 160 organizations had participated (either by electronic survey or phone interview). Of these, 29 organizations reported that they did not provide housing accommodations for both parents and their children during treatment; those 29 organizations were removed from the sample, creating a final list of 242 organizations (for a remaining total of 131 organizations, or 54% of organizations in the sample).

VOA outreach to providers and state agencies

After Wilder Research had concluded the formal interviewing and surveying of providers, VOA conducted additional data collection with the remaining organizations that had not been contacted previously. VOA also identified programs that had not been included in the SAMHSA Directory and programs for men and their children. From October – December 2018, VOA staff reached out to organizations by phone, reviewed program websites, and contacted state agencies that funded family residential substance abuse treatment programs. VOA staff, with the assistance of the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Director (NASADAD) Women’s Services Network, increased the number of programs in the total sample to 357, representing an estimated 291 organizations.

Final review of directory by programs

In February 2019, Wilder Research sent a draft directory to all programs with an email available. Programs were given a two-week period to provide any edits or updates to their organization’s information, as well as two reminders to provide feedback. Input from program staff was incorporated into the March 2019 version of the directory. By the time of this directory’s finalization in March 2019, Wilder had obtained information for 362 programs, representing an estimated 298 organizations. Additional information on the maximum age range of children that programs could accommodate was obtained for 82 percent of programs; information on the number of family units provided was obtained for 77 percent of programs; and the maximum size of families that programs could accommodate was obtained for 74 percent of programs.
